

FRONTLINE

Health Resources Employee Assistance Program

Counseling Services / Information & Referrals / Professional Consultation

800.451.1834

MEMORANDUM

Laughter In The Workplace

A new study says that laughter is contagious. If that's true, then it's definitely something you want to catch. Studies point to laughter's ability to improve morale and health, even to lower turnover rates. You can make laughter a more frequent occurrence by pointing out laughable events when they happen. Reduce self-restraint a bit and you will see opportunities to laugh more frequently. Hang out with employees who laugh. They often hang out with each other. Don't forget to laugh at yourself - a tough assignment if you are wrestling with fear and insecurity, but practice it anyway. Much workplace humor involves harmless mistakes made in front of others.

Journal of Neuroscience, Dec. 12, 2006.

Call 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to speak to someone who is professionally trained to assist you.

Getting Kids To Do Chores Around The House

For many parents, the easiest way to get children to do chores around the house is to say, "Do it -now." An alternative is to help children learn initiative and self-motivation - a desire to do chores. If you feel up to taking on this challenge, the cardinal rule is to make sure the children don't learn from the frown on your brow that a chore is boring. Instead, replace that message with this one: how a task is exciting because of observable results (e.g., an orderly, clean room) and how positive one feels when chores are done. Talk about the feeling and point out what is accomplished. Children will draw the connection and acquire a proactive life skill. Add more: help children see an undone chore as a challenge. Use the old "don't get mad at the mess - get even" approach. It may promote a different level of motivation for acquiring the powerful life skill of desiring an orderly world around oneself.

NEWSLETTER

March 2007 - May 2007

Bouncing Back With Resilience

Resilience is the ability to bounce back from misfortune or change, and since 9/11, it's a topic that has gained increased attention from sociologists. It's a timely topic because we face an age of superstress, with many personal threats such as the effects of war, financial insecurity, and family/social breakdown. Not everyone needs the same level of support when a crisis happens. And some, it appears, don't need much at all. They rebound like a foam pillow and just "keep on truckin'." These individuals are demonstrating resilience. What creates this resilience? And how can others get it? Here is what resilient people do and what you can do to bounce back faster from the toughest experiences life has to offer:

- Foster social support and close "give-and-take" relationships.
- Take care of your health, have a daily routine, and ensure structure and purpose in your life.
- Detach from harmful influences, people, or events that interfere with or distract you from recovery after a crisis.
- Have a forward-looking view of your life, and lock onto personal goals that you hold dear.
- Have a plan to "fall back on," or at least a solid idea of what you'll do if the worst happens.
- Cultivate a positive view of yourself and your life while maintaining a hopeful view of what the future will bring.

Next Time, You'll Speak Up!

Don't kick yourself for not speaking up at the last meeting to share a great idea. Instead, understand what held you back, make some corrections, and then go for it at the next meeting. Not asserting your idea or opinion is probably rooted in a firm doubt that others want to hear what you have to say. Forget, for now, how you learned and reinforced this script. Spend the next week observing one important thing: how a majority of people demonstrate their obvious interest in you. Compliments, smiles, eye contact, asking for your opinion, people willing to do you a favor if asked or asking you to share the lunch hour with them - these all count. They are here-and-now behaviors that prove you are valued. Keep a journal and try the exercise for three days. Chances are you will be more confident by the next staff meeting.

Information contained in FRONTLINE EMPLOYEE is for general information purposes only and is not intended to be specific guidance for any particular supervisor or human resource management concern. For specific guidance on handling individual employee problems, consult Health Resources Employee Assistance Program.

